

Terry cloth bath mitts

Mittens made of toweling are easy to make and fun to use. They substitute in the shower or bath for washcloths, and a pretty one, trimmed with nylon lace at the cuff and a big glass bead sewed at the ring finger, will delight any girl.

For the man of the house, make a pocket in the palm for a cake of soap, and use a bold color, such as bronze, navy, or dark green. Boys may not even fight off the use of soap, if it's in the pocket where they don't have to look at it.

Directions: On paper draw an outline of your hand, allowing a half inch all around for the seam, keeping your thumb away from your fingers as you do. (For a child's mitt, of course, allow for the difference in size.) Use three or four thicknesses of terry cloth for the palms, one for the back of the hand. Open a pocket in the top layer of cloth, and sew down to palm, leaving room for a cake of soap. Buttonhole-stitch or crochet around seams and at pocket edge. Add elastic at the wrist, and trim.